

Learn more about Leading Together

Crossing the Divide in Times of Polarization, January 17, 2023 webinar

Answers to a few more questions

It was great to be with so many of you at the webinar. I answered as many questions as possible when we were live and made a commitment to answer a few more. Check out the answers to those really thoughtful live questions at the end of the recorded webinar video. I've gone through chat and identified other questions that were asked and have taped a short video with answers to those additional questions. You can watch that video here. If you want to connect or learn more you can reach me at stephani@bravelylead.com

Here are the questions I address in the video:

- Is there a standard way for asking the participants if they felt "deeply heard"?
- How do you set the boundary between being and doing in order to help a process move forward? Are there tools that help?
- How do we have constructive conversations across values, knowing that values are key to our identities and that they don't change?
- Can you talk a little bit about political leaders and how we support and encourage brave conversations with our community that are not divided along political lines?

Do you live in eastern Ontario Canada? Near or around Kingston? Want to drive down from Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto and spend a couple of magical days on Wolfe Island?

Join me on January 25th!

One of things I love the best in the world is working with community to build leadership to talk together about important things. This time I get to do it in a place near and dear to my heart, Wolfe Island.

On January 25th at The Hotel Wolfe Island at 7pm I will lead a workshop on how to have brave, honest conversations about big issues in community. Instead of dividing and pulling us apart, we can choose different ways of working together that build trust, strengthen relationships, deepen understanding and connection and help us find a way forward - together.
